

Maria Kokidou

Creative content editor/creator/curator in a love affair with the publishing industry as well as the Web. Experienced journalist, editor in chief, social media manager. Innovation strategist with a twist. A storyteller with a keen eye for insights and patterns. Working with startups, entrepreneurs and C-level executives.

Maria started her professional career as a journalist. Her studies in Media, Communication and New Technologies led her to work as a technical editor in a few leading technological magazines. She served as the longest standing Editor in Chief of the Greek edition of PC Magazine (10 years), while at the same time pursuing two master's degrees on Technology and New Media.

Being an avid supporter of every innovating idea, she engaged with the startup community quite early. Currently acting as an editor in chief for all research activities and publications of Found.ation and its satellite companies, deploying the company's content marketing strategy, and orchestrating a team of editors curating and producing quality content published monthly by most top tier media outlets. Successfully curating and ghostwriting for top level executives' profiles.
